5 series aluminum alloys

Anodizing is to form a dense aluminum oxide film on the surface of aluminum alloy plate by electrochemical reaction, thus improving its performance and appearance.

Improve corrosion resistance:

The oxide film can effectively prevent the direct contact between metal and air, and significantly improve the corrosion resistance and service life of metal.

Enhance hardness and wear resistance:

Increase the hardness of metal surface to make it more wear-resistant and scratch-resistant.

Good decoration:

Form colorful colors on the metal surface.

Environmental protection:

The oxidation process is relatively environmentally friendly and meets the environmental protection requirements of European and American countries.
